about ME

I’m Hidayah but I go by Hazel too :D

I'm a Y2 Computer Science student at NUS with a background in Mass Communication from Ngee Ann Polytechnic.

Passionate about UI/UX design, I specialize in blending creativity with emerging technologies.

I’ve pursued Specialist Diploma in Data Science at Singapore Poly before entering NUS to deepen my analytical skills and broaden my technical expertise.

Branding & Storytelling
EMBERRA

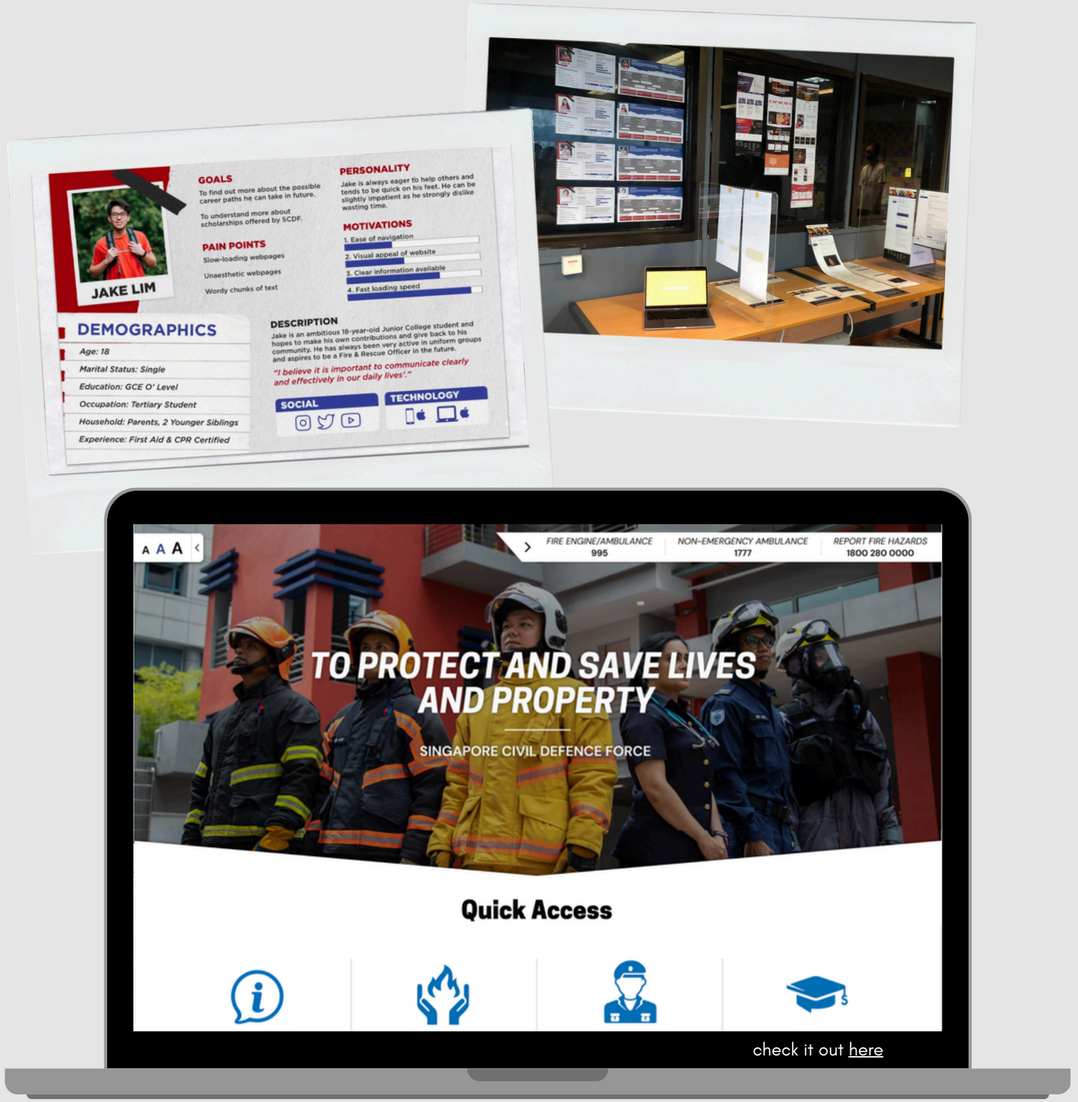

This project was done for ID3130, which I took out of personal interest to further explore branding, storytelling, and emotional design. Emberra is a conceptual digital platform inspired by the warmth of fireside conversations.

I developed the project from the ground up, creating the core narrative, defining the target audience, and designing the visual identity, including the colour palette and logo with clear conceptual reasoning.

UI/UX Website
SCDF

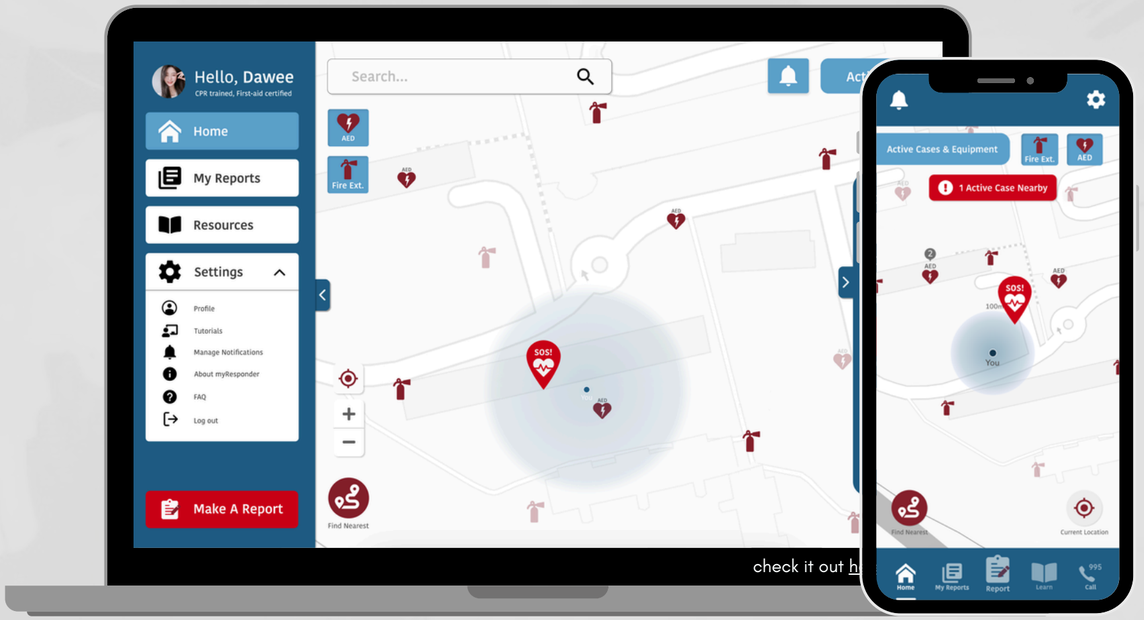

As the Creative Director, spearheaded a smooth transformation of the SCDF website. Conducting thorough interviews, diving into extensive research, and personally crafting designs and prototypes, our team prioritised users. With a focus on accessibility and a user-friendly experience, we've developed a prototype that paves the way for an exciting and engaging online presence for SCDF. It was undeniably challenging, yet incredibly enriching—a journey packed with valuable lessons and growth.

UI/UX Application

MYRESPONDER

I was challenged to redesign the MyResponder app, created by SCDF, to be compatible on both mobile and desktop. Successfully completing this in a three-person team, we developed personas and user journeys for multiple user groups. We conducted user testing to ensure the redesigned app met the needs and wants of all stakeholders.

UI/UX Application
INSIDR

Insidr, revolutionising networking and productivity, took shape in a two-person team where I was the sole creator of the prototype. Researching AI feasibility, conducting user testing, I crafted a prototype highlighting Insidr's unique value proposition —features like AI-powered job search and discussion forums. The impact was so profound Khairul Helmi, CEO of Meraki Academy, offered a free mentorship bootcamp.

PR Internship
DGI

Marketing Communications Intern at Directions Group Inc., a PR agency specialising in luxury fashion and lifestyle. As the support intern for five brands, I wrote mailers, created reports, and conducted social media and print tracking. I also drafted press releases, brainstormed PR events and packages, and supported event execution. My role involved organizing and bookkeeping samples, as well as liaising with media and photographers for sample loans.

Printed Materials

MVM CARD GAME

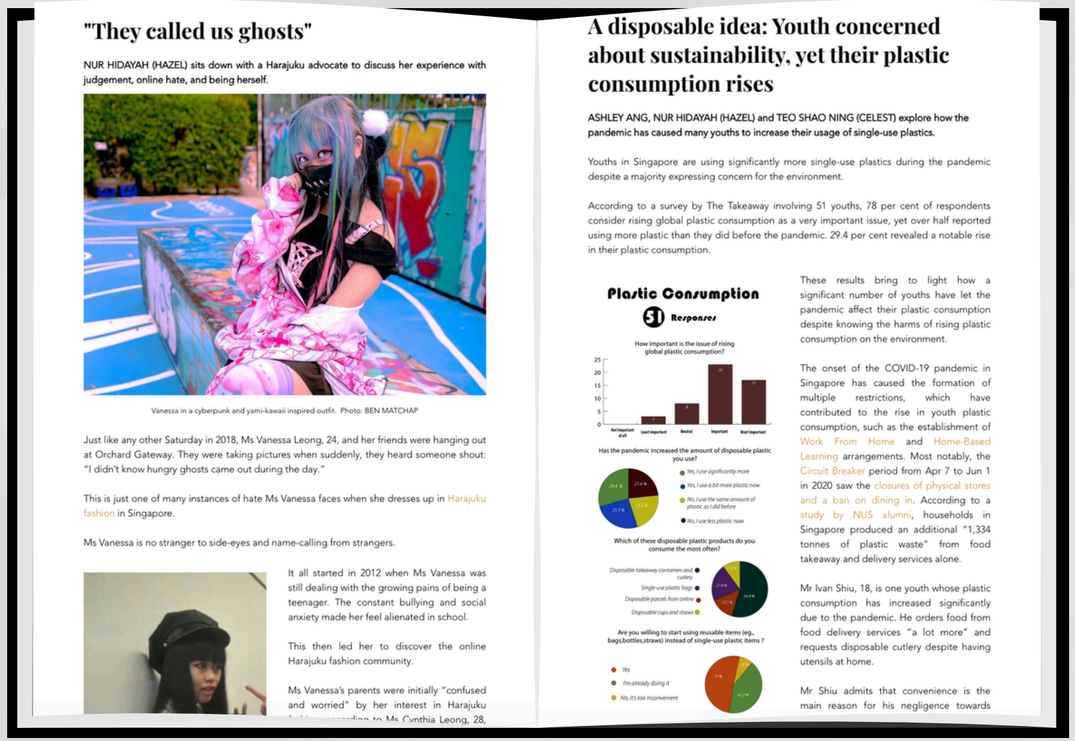

Designed captivating game cards for "Man VS Miracle," bringing to life characters, backgrounds, and actions inspired by open-ended prompts. Collaborated closely with a satisfied client, translating vague ideas into a visually engaging and cohesive gaming experience.

WRITINGS

I honed my journalistic skills by creating compelling narratives across different formats, from detailed news articles on societal issues to engaging human-interest stories. I learned how to interview people from all walks of life, seeking diverse perspectives to inform and engage readers.

"They called us ghosts"

NUR HIDAYAH (HAZEL) sits down with a Harajuku advocate to discuss her experience with judgement, online hate, and being herself.

Just like any other Saturday in 2018, Ms Vanessa Leong, 24, and her friends were hanging out at Orchard Gateway. They were taking pictures when suddenly, they heard someone shout: "I didn't know hungry ghosts came out during the day."

This is just one of many instances of hate Ms Vanessa faces when she dresses up in Harajuku fashion in Singapore.

Ms Vanessa is no stranger to side-eyes and name-calling from strangers.

It all started in 2012 when Ms Vanessa was still dealing with the growing pains of being a teenager. The constant bullying and social anxiety made her feel alienated in school.

This then led her to discover the online Harajuku fashion community.

Ms Vanessa's parents were initially "confused and worried" by her interest in Harajuku

A disposable idea: Youth concerned about sustainability, yet their plastic consumption rises

ASHLEY ANG, NUR HIDAYAH (HAZEL) and TEO SHAO NING (CELEST) explore how the pandemic has caused many youths to increase their usage of single-use plastics.

Youths in Singapore are using significantly more single-use plastics during the pandemic despite a majority expressing concern for the environment.

According to a survey by The Takeaway involving 51 youths, 78 per cent of respondents consider rising global plastic consumption as a very important issue, yet over half reported using more plastic than they did before the pandemic. 29.4 per cent revealed a notable rise in their plastic consumption.

These results bring to light how a significant number of youths have let the pandemic affect their plastic consumption despite knowing the harms of rising plastic consumption on the environment.

The onset of the COVID-19 pandemic in Singapore has caused the formation of multiple restrictions, which have contributed to the rise in youth plastic consumption, such as the establishment of Work From Home and Home-Based Learning arrangements. Most notably, the Circuit Breaker period from Apr 7 to Jun 1 in 2020 saw the closures of physical stores and a ban on dining in. According to a study by NUS alumni, households in Singapore produced an additional "1,334 tonnes of plastic waste" from food takeaway and delivery services alone.

Mr Ivan Shiu, 18, is one youth whose plastic consumption has increased significantly due to the pandemic. He orders food from food delivery services "a lot more" and requests disposable cutlery despite having utensils at home.

Mr Shiu admits that convenience is the main reason for his negligence towards

VIDEOS

For a Digital Journalism assignment in a three-person team, I took on the role of video editor. We transformed a newsworthy idea into a compelling, tightly edited video story with an accompanying synopsis and social media post. We reached out to Isaac Chiew, a 'seemingly regular guy,' and created a video exploring his world as Singapore's best rockstar.

Social Campaign
I AM

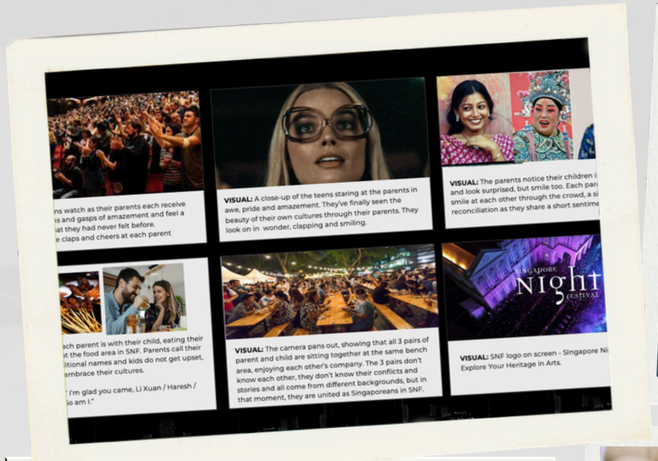

I AM the Movement," a self-love and affirmation project, was a fully integrated campaign at Ngee Ann Polytechnic. Collaborating with my capstone team, we encouraged individuals to write positive affirmations and display them on our pop-up board. Extending beyond our school, we created temporary tattoos, a website for sharing affirmations, and an Instagram filter with uplifting messages like 'I am strong' and 'I am loved.

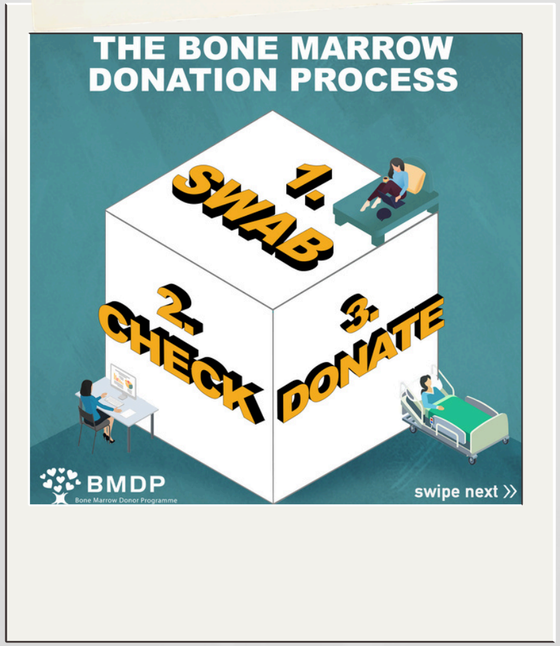

Marketing

BMDP, SNF, ETC

I crafted engaging social media materials, for both offline and online marketing campaigns for companies such as the Bone Marrow Donor Programme (BMDP), Singapore Night Festival (SNF), and others. I presented these campaigns to stakeholders at BMDP and SNF, demonstrating my ability to create single-minded propositions (SMPs) and ideate campaigns based on relevant trends, such as an NFT user-generated content competition when NFTs first emerged.

THAT'S ALL FOR NOW
The End
THANK YOU :)
